“Heroes” Of The Right Wing

By Eustace Mullins

During the American Revolution, despite the fact that the population was almost equally divided between patriots and Tories, there was no dearth of Americans willing to risk all they owned for the Cause of Liberty. For many of them, this was a great deal, as they were successful landowners and businessmen.

Over two hundred years later, on, it is useful to examine the leadership of the patriotic movement as I have observed it during the past fifty five years. I have seen countless workers, many of them unsung, who gave as unstintingly as did the Washingtons and Jeffersons of another day. Today, the majority of those who sacrifice for their country are wage earners barely able to keep up with rampant inflation, and the elderly eking out an existence on tiny pensions. Many of them give to the so called Christian leaders of the right wing, who rake in millions while they declaim that they are one hundred per cent supporters of the State of Israel.

Many few years ago, when I was working for Mr. H. L. Hunt, he coined the term, the Mistaken, for those who sabotage America in the service of alien powers. He labelled those who help America the Constructives. It would be an error to suppose that the Mistaken are limited to those who lead the Zionists in their Satanic mission to destroy Christian civilization. Some of the Mistaken have come to lodge in the patriotic movement, placed there by the machinations of the Anti-Defamation League and its countless subterranean operatives.

This infiltration, and the subsequent weakening of the patriotic movement, is a result of the parasite's need to attack the health centres of the host organism, and to control the host by taking over these centres. An illustration of this operation can be made by examining the three leading heroes of the right wing during the past half of a century.

These three heroes are, first. J. Edgar Hoover. Second, Senator Harry Byrd. and third General Douglas MacArthur. Their names are sacrosanct despite the fact that J. Edgar Hoover was a prisoner of the ADL, Harry Byrd was owned by Kuhn. Loeb, banking house, and General MacArthur failed to act when his country needed him most.

From its outset. J. Edgar Hoover's career was a masterpiece of duplicity. The means by which he ousted William Burns as Director of the Bureau of Investigation are not printable even today. J. Edgar Hoover remained a minor bureaucrat until poverty engulfed the nation as a result of the Federal Reserve Board's gold movements, causing the Crash of 1929. Particularly in the drought-stricken Midwest, hot-headed youngsters were holding up banks, after the bankers had evicted thousands from their farms. Fearing that this practice would spread to the East. the New York bankers insisted that Franklin D. Roosevelt act on the national level.

There were several agencies which Roosevelt could have employed. He chose the Bureau of Investigation because Hoover could easily be controlled. Renamed The Federal Bureau of Investigation, the agency sent armed men in pursuit of the bank robbers and a number of them were shot down. The bankers still feared the rage of the bankrupt citizens, and Roosevelt told Hoover he must personally go after the robbers. A master of the science of public relations. Roosevelt knew that the campaign must be given great publicity if it would have any effect.

For personal reasons. J. Edgar Hoover had avoided any personal publicity during his decade in office and his name had never appeared in the press. Now FDR insisted that he give up his anonymity and become a publicized "gangbuster." Hoover did show up after Alvin Karpis was captured and disarmed, and overnight he became the nation's Number One Crime Fighter, a title which he held undisputed for the remainder of his life. After his initial exposure, Hoover discovered that he liked the limelight, and he soon mastered the art of publicity. The press was alerted when a criminal was to be shot down, and the FBI became an established part of the entertain meat media. Meanwhile, organized crime, profiting from the demise of the independent hoodlums, became a fifty billion dollar a year enterprise, while Hoover held annual press conferences claiming there was no such thing as organized crime in America. During World War II, J. Edgar Hoover became the great Nazi fighter. During the Cold War, Hoover discovered that he was an anti-Communist. It was this stance which won him the undying support of the rightwing. Like his war against crime, Hoover's anti-Communism existed largely in the Sunday supplements. His sole accomplishment was the arrest of Judy Coplon. However, this did not prevent him from claiming credit for the capture of Col. Rudolf Abel, although Abel had been trapped by a newsboy who told a Brooklyn detective of a message found in a nickel. At the height of his well-publicized "anti-Communism." J. Edgar Hoover was working closely with agents of the Anti Defamation League to harass patriots and to destroy anti-Communist organizations in America. As a reward for this cooperation, the ADL leaders suggested ghost. writing a book, for which Hoover would receive the proceeds. The writer, a former secretary of the Communist Party, was Jay Lieb. stein, or Lovestone, and the book, aptly named Masters of Deceit., brought J. Edgar Hoover additional fame and fortune

During this period, many left- wing Jews became victims of their own paranoia, and believed that J. Edgar Hoover really was against Communism. He was attacked in the Daily Worker, and influential Jews such as Lowenthal and Cohen went to President Truman to get hint fired. Merle Miller in Plain Speaking the recorded conversations of Harry Truman. says on page 389 that when he asked Truman about J. Edgar Hoover, Truman replied. "One time they brought me a lot of stuff about his personal life, and I told them I didn't give a damn about that."

Truman was being honest about this, as his personal aide was an East European Jew named David Niles, or Neyhus. One of Niles' sisters was an important secret service operative of Russian Intelligence, and another sister was a highly placed intelligence operative of the State of Israel. Niles himself was a heavy drinker who, during his bouts, went out on homosexual prowls in Lafayette Square Park, across the street from the White House. For reasons of national security, two FBI agents followed him at a discreet distance waiting patiently in alleys while Niles propositioned truck drivers and then watched him return to the White House. Whatever Truman's personal feelings. he was powerless to remove J.

Edgar Hoover because of the Black Cabinet. This was a file of tape recordings, photos, and other evidence of sexual and financial peccadilloes of every important politician in Washington. The Black Cabinet enabled the FBI budget, which mounted each year, to be passed without question by an overeager Congress. Realizing his own vulnerability, from his first years as Director of the infant Bureau of Investigation, Hoover had devoted much of the Bureau's activities to amassing -crucial information about anyone who might become a threat to him. This "job insurance" kept him in office until the day he died.

In 1971, some of Nixon's aides, wary of the ease with which the FBI wire tapped and burglarized at will, feared that their activities might be recorded. They demanded that Hoover be retired. To Nixon's surprise, Hoover flatly refused. His life now became a paranoiac daily struggle to retain power, and his aides later described him as "completely insane." But nevertheless, he continued to obtain daily information on Nixon's activities. A few weeks before the Watergate burglary, Hoover obtained from a Mexico City operative photos of men passing large sums of money, and bank statements showing its origin. This was locked in his desk. Late at night, he received a call at his home that his office was to be entered very shortly. He hurried to the office to remove this material. The burglars already there, struggled with him. He was either badly beaten or suffered a heart attack. Still breathing, he was returned to his home, where, on outside instructions, he was smothered. Like Stalin, he was said to have died of a stroke.

The Black Cabinet was divided up among three Nixon aides

The second of our heroes is the late Senator Harry Byrd. He too was revered for his anti- Communist stand, and he was nominated for Vice President on a conservative ticket. Born in Martinsburg W. Va. it is unlikely that anyone would have heard of him, had he not been fortunate enough to grow up there with a very clever Jew named Lewis Lichtenstein Strauss. After peddling shoes in the Piedmont area, young Strauss suddenly turned up in Washington as the acting director of the US Food Administration. This was, surprising, as a horde of Jews had taken over America's wartime government under Woodrow Wilson. Baruch was in charge of industry. Meyer was in charge of finance. Lehman was in charge of procurement; why shouldn't L. L. Strauss be in charge of food?

Having no occupation, Byrd wrote to his prominent friend that he was thinking of going into politics. Strauss responded with a sum which launched Byrd's career. He became Governor of Virginia, and was appointed to the U. S. Senate to make some changes in the Federal Reserve Act. He became Chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. This was very convenient for Strauss, who now was a partner of Kuhn Loeb Co. the New York affiliate of the Rothschilds. Strauss built a huge estate in the Virginia hunt country, and continued to rule Virginia through the Byrd organization.

Harry Byrd, like so many other devoted public servants, had also become a multi-millionaire, with estates which made him the largest apple grower in the world. He owned two newspapers, several banks, and he had large stock holdings which had been picked up very cheaply after the Crash of 1929. Through apt public relations, Byrd became known as the conservative spokesman of the Democratic Party, to corral any popular reaction against the excesses of the New Deal. As such, he remained a trusted aid of FDR while maintaining a relentless public attitude against New Deal spending. On several occasions, he delivered impassioned speeches against huge appropriations bills, and then cast the deciding vote in favour of their passage. Having built a state bureaucracy which controlled every hamlet in Virginia, Byrd never had to campaign for re-election. He contented himself with an annual picnic to which the faithful were invited. This affair was like the Mayday Parade in Moscow.

The status of various Virginia hopefuls was determined by how far they sat from Byrd.

Byrd also maintained a vociferous opposition to Communism. He astounded the faithful patriots by ram-rodging the confirmation through the Senate of Baruch's secretary, Anna Rosenberg, as Assistant Secretary of Defence. She had belonged to some front organizations. Byrd left a fortune of forty million dollars, all earned during public service. This had been settled in trusts, so that his taxable estate was $268,000, a sum which would not have bought his palatial home, Rosemont.

Harry Byrd Jr., who had spent twenty-four years in the State Senate without introducing a bill, now decided to retire. Strauss, who still controlled Virginia, told him he must take his father's seat in the U. S. Senate, as the name was useful to them. Today, a reluctant Prince Hal sits in Washington, in the hereditary family Senate office. He also inherited the name of "conservative" from his father.

Our third hero of the right wing is General Douglas MacArthur. A sincere patriot and a fine soldier, MacArthur had been away for too many years. He failed to apprise himself of the situation when he returned. After having ruled Japan, where he exercised a hundred times more personal power than the deposed Emperor Hirohito had ever known, MacArthur returned to the battlefield as commander of the U. S., or as they were now known, the United Nations forces. He soon found that his battle plans, which were sent to Washington, were daily relayed to the Communists. MacArthur then attacked the Communists without informing Washington, and severely defeated them. He was not only fighting the Red Koreans and the Red Chinese, he was now fighting Anna Rosenberg and Harry Truman. The Jews demanded that MacArthur be fired, but Truman was afraid he decided to meet MacArthur on neutral ground, at Wake Island. Here he demanded that MacArthur make no more attacks on the Communists without notifying Washington ahead of time. MacArthur agreed, but when he returned to Korea, he again attacked and defeated the Communists without notifying Washington. Truman announced that MacArthur was fired.

General MacArthur now stated that he was flying to Washington. This terrified Truman and the guilty Communists. Paranoid as usual, they saw the man on the white horse riding to arrest and execute them. On the day that he landed, I was sitting at a Washington club with the president of the National Press Club and a number of correspondents. The State Department correspondent of the Washington Post informed us that he had tried to see Secretary of State Dean Acheson and had been told that Acheson was at his Maryland estate, with Secret Service men with machine guns standing behind the door. Truman waited with a few cronies at the White House in an upstairs room for the approaching debacle. When MacArthur's plane landed, every one, both anti-Communists and Communists, expected him to march to the White House and place Truman under arrest. Instead, MacArthur, accustomed to delegations of humble Japanese waiting upon him with their requests, supposed that a delegation of Americans would meet him requesting that he form a government. No such delegation appeared and MacArthur quietly retired, becoming another ex soldier.

While these three men, who did nothing for the patriotic movement, achieved national fame, many others, such as Joe McWilliams, who worked on the biological theory of the Jew, are forgotten. Should we wonder that so few young people are attracted to our movement, when our patron saints are such cardboard figures?

Shoichi Yokoi, in the jungles of Guam, endured a trial of self and culture, and won. Would any of us have had the courage, the tenacity, the endurance, to separate ourselves from our culture, our family, our friends, the environment to which we are accustomed, and subject ourselves to the rigors and hardships of a struggle for mere existence, and have come out of such an experience with all our values intact? I cannot answer this question. I do know that our people have the potential for greater distinction than this. However, it is obvious that under present conditions we are not living up to our abilities. Our forefathers, as a whole, lived closer to their potential than the vast majority of people today. If it is physically possible, we can do anything, yes, we can even go to the moon. But how are we to free ourselves from the vice imprisoning our culture?

This year, let us consider what we as individuals and groups can do to assist in the rebirth of our culture and our people.

And let us learn from the example of a humble Japanese soldier the meaning of duty, devotion, self-sacrifice, and responsibility.

Let us follow the example of Shoichi Yokoi, and, in every hour, of every day, act only for our existence, our culture, and our people.
